DIFFERENT TASTES.

It is not well to scoff or jeer at other people's joys; the pastime that to you seems queer may please the other boys. One man's amusement in this life is playing dominoes; another fellow beats his wife, and gives his soul repose. One packs a heavy gun for miles through stream and swamp and fen, and wears all kinds of happy smiles when he comes home again. Another likes to risk his bones on flimsy aeroplane, and when we scrape him from the stones we weep for him in vain. One fellow thinks it fun to dodge the cops with speeding car; another likes to go to lodge, where all the passwords are. And all these things I understand, and sympathize with folks who rummage through the blooming land for pleasures and for jokes. But when I watch a statesman try to run an office down, and talk until the fount is dry, and bore the whole blamed town; and when I see him, worn and tired, a-hanging round the polls, to find that he's been canned and fired by patriotic souls, I ask such sphinxes as are near: "What sort of men are these, who chase for office year by year? Does such sport really please? WALT MASON.

He has been my ideal. I want to stand for the things he stands for." Then he clasped hands with the colonel and moved on to give others a chance. Theodore Douglas Robinson, who was recently beaten at the primaries by the Sherman machine of Herkimer and Oneida, sat close by and enjoyed the exchange of courtesies. Col. Roosevelt's address this afternoon contained very few startling utterances. It was more of sermon than anything else, but was an interesting and instructive sermon, and the big audience followed the speaker with marked attention. The speech in part is as follows:

There are no two public questions of more vital importance to the future of this country than the problem of conservation and the problem of the betterment of rural life. Moreover, these two problems are really interdependent, for neither of them can be successfully solved save on condition that there is at least a measurable success in the effort to solve the other. In any great country the prime physical asset-the physical asset more valuable than any other-is the fertility of the soil. All our industrial and commercial welfare, all our material development of every kind, depends in the last resort upon our preserving and increasing the fertility of the soil. This, of course, means the conservation of the soil as the great natural resource; and equally of course it furthermore implies the development of country life, for there cannot be a permanent improvement of the soil if the life of those who live on it and make their living out of it is suffered to starve and languish, to become stunted and wenzened and inferior to the type of life lived elsewhere. "We are now trying to preserve, not for exploitation by individuals, but for the permanent benefit of the whole people, the waters and the forests, and we are doing this primarily as a means of adding to the fertility of the soil, although in each case there is a great secondary use both of the water and of the forests for commercial and industrial purposes. In ing with the present he steadily take thought for the future.

Cities Are Necessary, "In one sense, this problem with which we have to deal is very, very old. Wherever civilizations have hitherto sprung up they have always tended to go through certain stages and then to fall. No nation can develop a real civilization without cities. Up to a certain point, the city movement is thoroughly healthy; yet it is a strange and jamentable fact that always hitherto after this point has been reached the city has tended to develop at the expense of the country by draining the country of what is best in it and making an insignificant return for this best. In consequence in the past every civilization in its later Four Other Men Involved in stages has tended really to witness those conditions under which 'the cities prosper and the men decay.' There are ugly signs that these tendencies are at work in this nation of ours. But very fortunately we see now what never before was seen in any civilization-an aroused and alert public interest in the problem, a recognition of its gravity, and a desire
